International Diving Standards - Protecting You

ISO Standards exist for a number of diver and diving instructor qualifications. These standards were agreed by a team of international ISO experts and are recognised across the world as benchmarks of quality for diver training and the provision of diving services. The standards are also replicated as European Norms, so they are very widely recognised across the world.

Many training organisations aspire to conduct their courses in line with these standards, but some have been validated by a rigorous auditing programme conducted by EUF Certification International. EUF member training organisations offer courses from a training system that has been through this process.

If you take a course that is equivalent to one of the International (ISO) Standards, your final qualification can bear an additional statement showing that EUF certifies that qualification as meeting the requirements of the relevant ISO standard. It is like getting two qualifications for the price of one!

When a training system has been examined and approved by EUF Certification International, you can be sure that it has met the state-of-the-art requirements of the ISO Recreational Diving Standards in terms of content, educational support and quality control. EUF Certification International use professional standardisation experts and diving experts to inspect training organisations and service providers. These experts are completely independent of the agencies they audit, so you can be confident that their opinions have been objective.

Any diving qualification bearing the EUF Certification wording is widely recognised and accepted internationally. It is your assurance of quality diver training.
